Why teach Language Frameworks?	Why teach Spoken Language?	Why teach Accent and Dialect?	Why teach Gender, Power, Occupation and Technology?	Why teach World Englishes?	Why teach NEAs (Language in Action)?
Identification and analysis of an array of frameworks and methods allows students to develop vital communication, analytical and critical skills. By understanding methods of English and the power language wields, students develop a critical awareness around the role of language in politics, democracy and wider society.	Spoken Language is a creative tool for expression and social connection, as well as for individual cognition. The study of language as a symbolic system used to assert power in society is also fundamental to the human experience.	This unit allows students to see how and why language varies due to personal, social, geographical and temporal contexts. Students will develop understand theories and viewpoints on these aspects of language. Examination of language in this way also highlights key social issues of the modern world: discrimination and bullying.	These units illustrate how language is used for social control, propaganda and manipulation in the wider world. Students evaluate the power of language itself, as well as how and why it changes in the modern world.	Through the study of World Englishes, students learn to appreciate and accept other people; the idea that English is a global language, and the understanding that there are a wide variety of Englishes, is integral to creating positive citizens of the world. Students are also encouraged to question their own place in the world, considering why English is a dominant language, and whether it will remain so in the future.	The independence of the NEA allows students to synthesise all of their learning thus far and put it into action, producing a real study of language in action. Students will begin to critically evaluate their own hypotheses, as well as the language choices of others.
